4. What concerns (if any) do you have about relationship and sex education being taught in school?

- Age appropriate and opportunity for them to ask question
- None, it is vital that children know about sex education
- None, I believe that the teachers will teach this correctly
- Just that it is age appropriate and children should be split into year groups as planned to be taught at their level
- I don't mind as long as it's appropriate to the age of the child
- A bit young?
- Others replied with no concerns.

Parental response	Bolton by Bowland response
Age appropriate and opportunity for them to ask question	The RSE curriculum has been mapped out so that each year the children build on prior knowledge. RSE will be taught in a safe learning environment where clear ground rules will be set for children to ask questions to find out more information. There will be a question box for children to write questions down that they might not want to ask in class. These will be addressed either in the lesson or at the start of the next session.
None, it is vital that children know about sex education	Great, thank you for your support.
I believe that the teachers will teach this correctly	Your support is very much appreciated.
Just that it is age appropriate and children should be split into year groups as planned to be taught at their level	Children will be split into year groups where they are taught together: • Year 1 and 2 • Year 3 and 4 • Year 5 and 6 (we will also split the boys and the girls in this year group) All work will build on prior knowledge and will be taught in a sensitive manner.

A bit young?

The curriculum has been carefully planned so that the children will learn at an age appropriate level.

5. Would you consider withdrawing your child from relationship and sex education?

6. Other comments that were made

- As long as it is age and maturity related to each child I don't see any problem with my children learning sex education and relationships.
- Introducing this content as a normal part of education/school life, helps to normalise the often very still tabooed subject. Also, within the safety and limits of a learning environment, this will in turn help my daughter to feel more able to discuss these issues as and then, they arise. Thank you Mrs Evans :)
- As long as things are done sensitively that is fine.
